Iki Tsushima and Goto as Border Islands Bridges between people since ancient times

Long ago, important cultural influences such as new technologies, knowledge, and foods, came by sea. The islands of Nagasaki Prefecture formed a sea route linking Japan with the Asian continent, and served as important centers of exchange. Among those islands, Iki comprised the frontline. During the Yayoi period, oceangoing trade brought extreme prosperity to Ikkikoku, but at the same time, defenders were stationed here on the frontlines of the nation's defense.

壹岐神 Iki Kagura

Nationally Designated Important Intangible Folk Cultural Property of Japan

“Iki Kagura” is a 700 year old traditional Shinto performance, and a nationally designated important intangible folk cultural property. Different from the Kagura traditions in other regions, the individuals who dance and play the music in Iki’s Kagura must be part of the Shinto priesthood in order to perform; because of this exclusivity, it is considered to be a very sacred and valuable cultural asset. The songs do not have written records, and instead are passed down orally, and the dance is conducted in a mere space of two tatami mats. From autumn through winter, there are Kagura performances nearly every day in each of the island’s shrines.

Kagura Masks

Dances that use masks express the appearance of a god. From ancient times, Kagura masks have been used in the performances for Yatagarasu, Sarutahiko, and Uzume. In recent years, masks are also used in the “Honen-mai” dance, so you can enjoy them in 4 performances.
